Two good stories and one so-so one and one really awful one

By Amazon Customer

I bought this book for the Jo Beverley story, having read all the books in her Malloren series. I'd never heard of the other three authors, but I was willing to give them a try.

I have to say that I was a bit disappointed by the first story, Jo Beverley's "Forbidden Affection." The premise was interesting enough: young heroine is addicted to Gothic novels, particularly those written by a specific author. Heroine's family comes to London for her older sister's Season and learns that: 1 - they have rented the late author's town house, 2 - the author was murdered in the house next door, and 3 - the owner of the house, suspected of the murder, has been abroad for 10 years. The heroine finds a secret passageway connecting the two homes, and the story takes off. I like Beverley's writing style and did like the heroine, but I could not get over the fact that the girl was 16 and the hero was 30. It just seemed bizarre to me. And a bit icky. My grade: C+

"The Pleasure of a Younger Lover" by Vanessa Kelly was a pleasant surprise. Like the first story, there is an age difference between the hero and heroine, but she is 32 and he is 28, so it was a bit more believable. The hero has loved the heroine for years, having grown up in a neighboring estate. But has to overcome her insecurities and self-doubt, plus help her clear her late husband's name, before he can win her. I liked Kelly's writing style, and I found both characters to be very believable and quite likeable. I'd like to read more of her work. My grade: A

"The Naked Prince" by Sally MacKenzie was a surprise. I didn't think I'd like it, since the language and actions didn't seem authentic to the time period (Regency, although it isn't specified). But the story of how the two lead characters end up working together to prevent the hero's friend from a disastrous marriage, added to the very obvious intellectual compatibility between the hero and heroine made this an enjoyable read. I think MacKenzie stretched the bounds of believability by having her prudish spinster stick around for an entire orgy weekend, but I was willing to suspend disbelief. My grade: B

The same cannot be said for the final story in the anthology, "A Summer Love Affair" by Kaitlin O'Riley. This is the classic example of someone writing a 20th Century story set in the 19th Century. Remember, the 1880s were a time where Victorian women were so modest that they covered up the legs of their pianos, for goodness sake. Yet in O'Riley's interpretation of this era, within 24 hours of meeting the hunky, half-dressed British hero during her visit to Spain, the sheltered English ingenue finds herself posing virtually nude with him for a painting. That ridiculous scene, combined with a very stilted writing style, made this story virtually unreadable for me. My grade: D-

I read all of Jo Beverley's books and this one was no exception. I love romance novels even though sometimes they write almost the same kinds of books but then how many times can you read the same kind of books over and over without repeating yourself.

Beverley is the best of the lot

By Dianne Rose

I'm a long time Beverley fan, and even I must admit this story does not show her at the top of her game but her story is definitely the best of this uneven lot.
